FRAMING YOUR WORK A.K.A. COMPLETION

I find that framing the work is what allows me to reach completion.

Even though we might consider that the work is never really complete.

The best we might hope is that it might have served it's purpose.

To express the rawness of our emotions;
to lead us to the next idea...

It is not linear indeed, however, for some reason - while I might 'argue' with the 'self', whether the work is good enough to be presented.

I found that it is necessary for me to look at it (or put it on the wall), for a few years, before realising that it was actually good enough.

I guess that the work is like the mind, always, looking for something, justifying, seeking... and so on...

"Framing the work, gives it a border, it acts as a convention;

"I accept that it is complete",

"I accept to free time", not to touch it or edit it anymore.

The frame acts as the needed ground; where I can remove myself from the equation and become part of the audience!

FRAMING YOUR WORK A.K.A. COMPLETION

I find that framing the work is what allows me to reach completion. Even tho, one might consider that the work is never really easy hit. the bet we might hve is that it might have served it's pay on. To egress the rawness of our emotions; to lead us to the next idea.... It is not linear indeed, however, for some reason- While I might langue' with the 'self 1, whether the work is good enough to be presented. I found that is necessary for me to look at it (a put it on the hide), In a few years, before realising that it was actually good enough. I gun that the work is like the mind, always looking for something, in Hif gig, seeking..-and Sam...

- Framing the work, give it a border, it acts as a convention: "I accept that it is complete", "I accept to page time", not to touch it a edit it anymore. The frame acts as the neutral ground; where I can remove myself from the equation and became last of the audience!
